The International Midwinter Convention and Contests was held earlier than usual this year in New Orleans, LA on January 10. Harmony Grits won the right to represent the Carolinas District in the Seniors Quartet Contest. Unfortunately due to a last minute family emergency, the quartet was not able to compete.

Leadership Academy

The 2015 Leadership Academy was held January 7th in Hamlet, NC. In addition to the normal classes for chapter officers the Carolina District Leadership Academy included classes for directors and brings in outside professionals. This year we had two outside facilitators, Marty Monson, Barbershop Harmony Society CEO, and John Weigand, an executive leadership consultant who lead our Directors/Presidents class. Marty can be seen taking a picture of the group in the photo to the right. What he is trying to show is the sheer number of attendees for our little district. We are head and shoulders above any other district percentage-wise.

We had 117 men in attendance in 2015, not counting 12 faculty, including Marty. That compares to 112 in 2014. This was the fifth straight year with an increase in attendees – every year since the founding of the district. Fully 15% of our chapter members attended as compared to low single digits for most other districts. Twenty-four of 27 chapters sent delegates!
North Carolina Harmony Brigade 23rd Rally

The 130-man North Carolina Harmony Brigade met in Pinehurst, NC on January 16-17 for its 23rd Annual Rally. The Saturday night show featured Let’s Sing! The Harmony Brigade Extreme Quartetting movement, started in the North Carolina, was recognized in May-June Issue of The Harmonizer with an article (below) about the first European Harmony Brigade event.

This was a good year for the Carolinas District getting visibility in The Harmonizer. In addition to the article above, the Golf Capital Chorus (Pinehurst, NC) was included as part of the Storytellers section (right) in the March-April issue and the May-June issue featured an article by Lorin May about the 2014 Fall Festival in Charleston (included in full on the next three pages). NECESSITY is the mother of convention

Determined to never host another low attendance, money-losing event, the Carolinas hosted a convention where ... wait, only 40 men were invited to compete?

So how did the Carolinas get 360 attendees—from a district of 850 men—to come along for the fun? The answer has less to do with the art of festival planning, and a lot to do with how the Carolinas District created a new playbook that helps leaders address chapters’ needs.

After years of wrestling with two of its larger challenges (a money-losing convention, and chapters and families disengaged from district life), the Carolinas District addressed both with an outside-the-box November event (a “Fall Festival”) that turned out to be a big hit. Part of the solution lay in two of the district’s strengths: high-draw tourist destinations, and a number of retired Fortune 500 Executives who have established a “continuous improvement” mentality in what they describe as a “chapter-driven” district model.

When you’re trying to attract the less hard-core members of the barbershop world to an event, it doesn’t hurt to host it in a city like Charleston, S.C. (After three days, I had half a mind to pack up the family and move there.) But this article is no travel log, and your district may or may not even have the draw, demographics, or desire to pull off an event like this.

But Marty Monson didn’t send me to beautiful Charleston to collect convention planning tips. He was intrigued by the thought process and values that led to such a radical—and, as it turns out, successful—departure from traditional district events. While the particulars may or may not be universal in application, many of the guiding principles may apply to nearly any chapter or district.

A hard shove into out-of-the-box thinking

Leaders of the Carolinas District (NSC, or North/ South Carolina) had plenty of reasons to question the traditional convention model. But the biggest catalysts were two-fold: the past NSC Spring International Preliminary Contest was hemorrhaging money, and NSC chapters told leadership that they didn’t want their choruses to go to two conventions a year.

The district’s traditional fall convention (now held in the spring) was solvent and well attended by the more competitive quartets and choruses (more on the less competitive chapters in a minute) but the spring preliminaries for the international contest drew sparse numbers. Yet, the district was required to host it, and had to absorb the prohibitive expenses of a required double judging panel and other overhead.

Put down the pitchforks, pick up the spreadsheets. What is the point in making us host this money-losing contest? That’s the conversation NSC leaders started having among other districts’ leaders and with the Society Contest & Judging Committee (SCJC) and Society Board. After a lot of collaborative work, districts now have permission to host only one convention a year if they choose. (Two important lessons from this: [1] The SCJC and Society Board are open to collaboration and [2] if you’re trying

*May/June 2015 * The HARMONIZER 15
Singing judge Eddie Martinez spent a grand total of three hours of his trip performing judging duties. He then spent all day Saturday coaching quartets and choruses, joined by the other two district quartet contest judges and by other coaches drawn from the Carolinas District. Every chorus in attendance was there for the express purpose of coaching — and to enjoy Charleston and other festival events.

THE WEEKEND’S ONE AND ONLY CONTEST SESSION. Friday night’s event was at a low-cost venue — a church with a good sound system, low fees, and roughly the same seating space as the projected attendance. Note the judging pits one contest administrator, three judges, and a practice judge — a configuration chosen to keep costs low. Each of the 10 finalist quartets (which qualified at the district’s spring convention) performed a three-song package with divisi. The judges chose the district champ based on the two contestable songs; the audience chose which quartet would perform on the Saturday Night Dinner Show on the U.S.S. Yorktown.

to persuade one or both, it doesn’t hurt to have the NSC — and its exhaustive data — on your side.)

After a win, keep scoring. Ironically, the Fall Festival means NSC is still hosting two annual conventions. But the removal of a once onerous financial requirement opened the creative floodgates. "We were allowed to have fun once we got around the need to have double panels at two separate events," said NSC President Bob Johns. "And we wanted to do something different."

This chapter-driven district didn’t want a second contest-driven convention

NSC is culturally different from a lot of districts, and those differences are expressed in its "chapter-driven" governance model. The NSC House of Delegates not only has input in directing district affairs, but participates in many of the stages of program and event planning and prioritization. By being "chapter-driven," the actions of the district board are to be for the good and betterment of the chapters. This "raise all boats" mentality means district leaders are called to take an active, hands-on role in the success and development of all of its chapters.

"The view from the bottom up is that the district is there to help the chapters," said Brian Gleich from the New Bern N.C., Chapter, Southern Gentlemen Barbershop Chorus. "They’re attending our chapter and board meetings to help us grow and self-evaluate."

Chapter polls play a prominent role in determining district priorities; chapters said they wanted quality judging input and coaching outside of and beyond a district contest eval session. There was essentially no chance the chapters would approve a primarily contest-driven fall event. The idea wasn’t even considered.

The competitors already have their own convention.

If NSC hasn’t been known for a lot of competitive powerhouse during its brief history, there are plenty of competitive singers working on it — and getting a lot of district-wide support. NSC’s spring convention is built

District quartets spent Saturday morning receiving coaching, then on Saturday afternoon applied those lessons as moving performers at Charleston’s large and popular Farmer’s Market.

“Skinny” Harris Recognition

A special highlight of the Spring Convention was the District recognizing Melvin J. “Skinny” Harris. Here are President Bob John’s remarks.

Ladies and gentlemen:

Today we’d like to take a couple minutes to recognize a bit of our history by honoring a special guest of the district. We have with us a Brother in Harmony who became involved in barbershop here in Charlotte shortly after the chapter was chartered. Given Charlotte is our host it is fitting for us to recognize one of Charlotte’s own.

Charlotte is the third oldest active chapter in the Carolinas—chartered in February 1950 as part of the Dixie District. Melvin “Skinny” Harris joined Charlotte in January 1951. In his job as traveling salesmen he was able to regularly visit all the Society chapters in his four-state area of the North and South Carolina, Georgia, and Florida.

As time went on he did a lot more for the district and the society than visit chapters. He dove into a leadership role at many levels: He was:

- Piedmont Division VP in 1962
- Dixie District Exec VP & BOTY in 1963
- Dixie District President in 1964 & 1965
- Society Board Member 1966-68

In 1968 he began what became twenty years as Society Judge — first, as a Harmony Expression judge and when categories changed he became an Interpretation judge. Starting in the mid-seventies he became Chairman of Judges. He was also DIX C&J chairman in 1974. On top of all this, Skinny directed the Charlotte chorus from 1976 through 1978.

The Dixie District Hall of Fame was established in 1994 and, recognizing Skinny’s significant contribution to the Dixie District, he was inducted in the 1995 class one of the first 6 inducted. Wow! What a résumé.

As a fitting memento to Skinny’s contributions to his chapter, his district and to the Society, our district historian Gary Smith was able to come up with a great photo of Skinny in the February/March 1965 Rebel Rouser and had it framed for this occasion.

Thank you, Skinny, for all you’ve done for Barbershop!

(Editors’ Note. We were saddened by the news that Skinny Harris passed away on October 28, 2015 at the age of 95.)
Harmony Platoon

The Spring Convention also featured a new quartet-oriented event – Harmony Platoon. Here is how Bob Clark described the early history of “Platoon”.

I was asked to write a short paper regarding the creation of “Platoon” events in the Barbershop Harmony Society. To make any sense of Platoon, it is necessary to have an understanding of its big brother “Brigade”, so let’s start there.

The Barbershop Harmony Society (aka Society for the Preservation and Encouragement of Barbershop Quartet Singing in America, Inc.) was formed in 1938 to preserve the American art form of four part harmony singing. Early on, one of our founders, O C Cash proposed a contest to identify the world’s best Barbershop Quartet. From our beginnings to the present time, contests have been instrumental in providing incentives for men to sing well in quartets.

Through our history there have been organizations called Brigades at which dedicated barbershoppers gathered to relish four part harmony. Such an organization was created in North Carolina called the North Carolina Harmony Brigade (NCHB). Under the leadership of Charlie Rose, the NCHB evolved into a unique organization of talented dedicated men who were passionate about barbershop quartet singing. Initially limited in membership to North Carolina barbershoppers, the Brigade met annually for a contest in which individual preparation was essential, for the quartets were formed randomly of the attendees. The process became known appropriately as “Extreme Quartetting”.

Attendance at NCHB was by invitation only. Current members could invite guests who were given the opportunity to learn their part for twelve challenging songs. They were evaluated for two years, and if their performance was satisfactory, they would be invited to membership in the Brigade. I was first invited as a guest in 1996. Knowing the demanding standards of the NCHB, I worked hard to learn my part (bari) to all the songs. I knew all of the music better than I had ever learned any song previously-----it was not good enough. I had to re-calibrate. The next year and ever after, I was prepared by knowing every word, every note, every breathing point, and every arrangement.

The Brigade weekend involved a show for the public that included performances by organized quartets and performances by a chorus made up of all the members of the Brigade. This chorus of 120-150 men was unbelievable. They rehearsed each song to be presented on the show (normally 12 songs) for 10 minutes. The results were breathtaking. The quality of the singing and presentation was far superior to the performance of choruses that I had been in that had practiced two songs for months. It was a revelation.

Once I became a member of the Brigade, I encouraged the good singers in my chapter to consider Brigade, and I invited them to get involved, work hard, and become Brigaders.

As more of our chapter member became Brigaders, the quality of our chapter chorus improved rather dramatically. I thought we could have a wonderful chorus if only we were all Brigaders. Many of our members simply do not have the skills, some would not commit to that level of work, and some have no interest. I thought perhaps a middle ground could be helpful.

Some of the principles of Brigade could apply in a less vigorous form:

* Each individual really learn the words, notes and arrangement to easy songs
* Each individual gain the ability to sing his part in a quartet
* Use the thrill of competition to bring commitment
* Have the event stand-alone----separate from chapter meetings—something special
* While it is competition, it must be fun
* Use notable non-chapter judges for credibility
* Make awards prestigious
* Relish and celebrate the fellowship that occurs
With these things in mind, I proposed to the chapter board in 2007, an event with Brigade principles for our chapter members only. This is much smaller than a Brigade, so I proposed calling it a “Platoon”. The board gave its approval and we set about planning the event and selling its virtues to the members. We held the event on a Friday evening (not the regular meeting night) at a location that permitted adult beverages. We gave each quartet time to practice together before the competition. Each quartet sang two songs, the judges picked the top four for the finals, and a chorus of all competitors performed all the songs under the direction of our director. We ate pizza, drank beer, and generally had a great fun evening. The event was judged a success and it has been an annual event at the chapter ever since.

We improved the process each year. We reached out to local chapters and invited them to participate with us and taught them how to run a “Platoon” in their own chapters.

I began getting phone calls from around the country. I had a number of conversations with men from Arizona and Southern California. They were more interested in using the technique at the district level. I told them it should work and I believe it has.

The North Carolina Harmony Brigade model has spread in the United States and is now in the UK with more Brigades in the planning stage. The rigors of Brigade is only for the dedicated barbershopper, but every barbershopper could be a better performer by participating in events such as Platoon that help them sharpen their skills and create enthusiasm for quartet singing.

The Barbershop Harmony Society is a quartet organization. Chapters of the society vary widely in their likes and wants. The chapter chorus is attractive to many men who have little interest in singing in a quartet. That is OK. But my experience at Brigade has taught me that if you desire a good singing chorus, it is a good idea to have that chorus composed of men with the ability to sing well in a quartet. Anything that moves the chapter in that direction is helpful. Platoon moves the chapter in that direction.

The Platoon history continues from the HarmonyPlatoon.org website.

In 2012 the Far Western District (FWD) began a new quartet activity called Harmony Platoon. The event was held in conjunction with District and Division conventions. It typically began 24 hours prior to start of the general convention activity. Participants who paid the registration fee for Platoon received high quality learning tracks for four songs about two months prior to the convention. At the event they were assigned randomly to different quartets and competed in several contests, in addition to informal singing with a variety of combinations. … No association with Harmony Brigade and Extreme Quartetting is claimed or implied. Some of the Brigade principles are used, however, such as requiring those attending to be totally prepared on the music. … A major difference between Platoon and Brigade is the difficulty level of arrangements selected. Platoon songs will be of “Moderate” or “Medium” level of difficulty, so the Platoon is within the reach of the “average” member.

Harmony Platoon events were held at FWD Spring and Fall Convention as well as at several Division contest in 2012 and 2013. The platoon concept spread to the Evergreen District 2013 Fall Convention and starting in 2014 Harmony Platoon events have been held at both International Conventions (Mid-Winter Convention in January and the International Convention in July). In fact the beginning of Harmony Platoon at Carolinas District Conventions was when Jim Gordon went to the 2015 Mid-Winter Convention in New Orleans to participate in and learn how to run a Platoon. Jim immediately brought the concept back to the Carolinas District with a very successful Harmony Platoon at the 2015 Spring Convention. Details of format of the Carolinas District Harmony Platoon can be found in the Spring Convention section.
International Convention

Representing the Carolinas District at the International Contest in Pittsburgh, PA July 2-4, 2015 were:

Zero Hour placing 23rd in the Quartet Contest
Let’s Sing! placing 45th in the Quartet Contest
Riverside Ringers placing 21st in the Collegiate Quartet Contest
Carolina Vocal Express placing 17th in the Chorus Contest

All International Contest photos are by Lorin May, Barbershop Harmony Society
To say that the Carolina Vocal Express had a great year in 2015 would be a monumental understatement. After our outstanding debut in the NSC Spring contest in 2014, our challenge was to keep the momentum going since we would not be competing at International for another 15 months. We filled our rehearsals with some outstanding coaching from Theresa Weatherbee, Brent Graham, Gary Plaag, David Mills and others. We competed again in the Spring of 2015 in Charlotte, NC with a very “ambitious” presentation plan for ‘Love Me’. It really challenged us to become better performers and step up our game.

We made some modifications to the plan heading into International in Pittsburgh in the summer of 2015. The week in Pittsburgh for CVE was a whirlwind. We had 96 men on stage, most of whom had never performed on the International stage ever before and many that had never even attended an International competition before. So, needless to say, the logistics of keeping everyone informed and getting guys in the right place was a colossal task. Fortunately, men like Rex Partlow, Steve Curulla, Wally Miles, Matt Gorman and many others stepped up to make sure that it all went seamlessly. The young men in Riverside Ringers did an outstanding job on Tuesday evening in the Collegiate contest and many of the CVE guys were there to root on the quartet who also all sang with CVE on Friday morning. On Wednesday, Let’s Sing and Zero Hour both sang in the quarterfinals of the open competition and gave incredible performances. The support in the crowd from the CVE brethren was overwhelming. CVE had a rehearsal on Wednesday night and then one on Thursday afternoon at our assigned hotel.

We all gathered in our shiny fuchsia shirts on Friday morning, July 3rd. Our final few minutes together before boarding the bus to take us to the Consol Energy Arena in downtown Pittsburgh were really special. We talked about what the songs that we were about to perform meant to us and we decided that we wanted to share our joy and emotions with the audience. This was the time that the brotherhood and unity of CVE came shining through.

We had a delay once we arrived at the arena, and we waited in the buses for what seemed like an eternity. Once we were finally herded into the backstage of the arena, we had a few final moments to prepare our minds for the stage. Finally, we started loading the risers as screams from our family and supporters started coming out from the massive crowd. Then, the moment came, we were announced and the show was on! It was truly the best performance that CVE had ever given and then, in the blink of an eye, it was over and we were off the stage.

CVE finished in 17th place out of 28 amazing choruses from around the world. CVE scored an A-level chorus score of 81.3. This was the highest score that CVE had ever received and it was the best score and placement for any chorus in the brief history of the Carolinas District. The performance and experience in Pittsburgh will hopefully be just the beginning of a bright future on the International stage for the Carolina Vocal Express.

In the Fall of 2015, CVE sang at the Carolinas District Fall Festival. Ben Mills, retired as musical director of CVE and handed the reigns to Dale Comer. Ben led CVE from its birth in 2013 and really helped to form the chorus into what it is today. Ben will be sorely missed, but the future of CVE is still very bright. Look for amazing music and performances from the Carolina Vocal Express for many years to come! - Carolina Vocal Express
The Fall Festival

The first Carolinas District Fall Festival was a huge success last year. Continuing the tradition of holding the event at a destination city the second Fall Festival was held in Savannah, GA at the Marriott Hotel on the riverfront of the Savannah River. The Fall Festival featured the same format as the previous year with the addition of a Riverboat Cruise on Thursday evening. Supersonic was crowned the 2015 District Quartet Champion and Infinity was second place and voted the Audience Favorite.
